MEETINGS.

AN OLD MILL GONE.-Kinsley Mill at Buckland will never grind again. The dam is gone, the building long up used is almost in roins. They are putsing up a big merchant mill just half a mile shove it, and it looks as if the old mill was doomed. This is a said thought to those who remember it in flourishing to those who remember it is flourishing days, when wagon after wagon stood is line to get to the doors and the mill boys played marbles or swam to the translucent water. Every building about the place was kept freshly painted or whitewashed. In the dwelling, on the hill, was the cherry family of Delaphanes of all ages living in the sweetest harmony with each other and with genuine kindness towards all the world. Most of the older members rest under the clods of the valley and the younger ones are scattered in every younger ones are scattered in every direction. Every spring an occasional rose bush or a hardy junguil tries to perpetuate old memories, but the weeds and the wild berries crowd them ruth-lessly and before the spring days are over a wild waste covers the place.— [Warrenton Virginian.
